All those working hard to excel in their exams...

...without malpractice!

Chapter One Insight for Success

As your exams draw closer, I'd like to share with you some thoughts that could help you increase your chance of achieving success. But before I get into that, I want to remind you that, in life, the result you get in any pursuit is largely influenced by the information at your disposal.

It's not enough to know what to do and make up your mind to do it; what really matters is rolling up your sleeves to take action. However, you can't even do the right thing when you haven't come to know the right thing to do.

So, as you aspire for better performance in your next exams, I implore you to start with knowing what you should do to boost your success.

What I want to share with you in this book is useful insight which if you apply them diligently will increase your chance of success in your next exams.

I'd like you to know that no matter how badly you have performed in your exam, you have a bright chance of not just excelling in your exam; but recording resounding performance that will make your examiner's jaw drop.

So, drop any fear about exam you may harbour because of your last exam. I want to help you excel in your exam this time around.

Now, let's go....

Chapter Two Not In School to Write Exams!

First thing I want you to bear in mind is that you are not in school to write exams. That is, as important and indispensable as exams are, the truth is that you are not in school just for writing exams.

Your purpose for being in school is to learn NOT to write exams. This may sound contradicting to what you probably already know but patiently follow me and I'll show you why.

You are in school to acquire knowledge and have your character developed in the process through the activities, people and situations you will encounter during your exams.

It's unfortunate that many people go through school thinking and behaving as though the end result of education is to pass exams or get excellent result.

I understand that in our society, your graduating grade matters and it's so important that without getting a fairly good grade, you don't even get a chance to show what you know in most companies that hire graduates.

In practice, your grade opens or closes doors of employment for you, irrespective of what you know or don't know. Because when jobs are advertised, it's often specified that application is open to people within certain graduation grade.

I'm also aware that you want to get good grade to show to your sponsors as a way of saying 'thank you' to them for their sacrifices; but there is more to your graduating grade. (For more on this, read my post, Power of Your Graduating Grade?)

Having said that, I want to delve deeper into the real matter about what your exam really is.

Exam is simply an exercise designed to test how much you understand what you were taught in class and your ability to apply them in different situations. It's not a plan between the school authorities and your lecturer to make you fail so you won't graduate.

It's a system designed to get a proof that you actually participated in the class and understood the course content. Any student who truly understands his course shouldn't be afraid of exams; because he/she has the basic arsenal required to win the exam battle.

While it's important to not only pass your exam; but get excellent result, I dare say, the result of your exam is not the real purpose of education.

Those who think that education is about passing exams alone suffer one major thing – incompetence! Consequently, they succeed in their exam by hook or crook, except that when they are presented with real life issues to deal with based on their supposed result; they fumble because they haven't understood what they claimed to have passed in their exams.

Such people get jobs based on their excellent result; but hardly stay or rise in that job because they don't have the depth of knowledge required to really excel in their job.

They show their First Class or Second Class upper certificate; but when asked intelligent questions or given tasks at work that will prove that excellent grade, they will start stammering.

They have the best result; but the worst of performance in real life tests and exams because they only focused on result as if it's an end in itself instead of a means to an end.

The shameful thing about their situation is that they get jobs with high expectations from their employers, but perform abysmally.

Therefore, a key to excelling in your exam is attending your lectures, studying your course materials and even digging deeper to ensure you have mastery of all that you are supposed to learn from your course outline.

All of these exercises are designed to ensure you understand your course and when you do, you are at least 65% good to go in your exams and possible tests.

Therefore, long before your exam draws close, boost your chance of success by attending lecture and studying your course materials to gain mastery of them.

Most people who wait till exam time table comes out to study often embark on hasty preparation and the result is mostly poor preparation.

Chapter Three Exam Success; Not By Luck

One of the important things you should know is that nobody passes an exam accidentally.

Exam success is hinged on deliberate actions that naturally lead to brilliant performance. It doesn't happen by chance. Those who play around without deliberately taking the right action and steps towards passing get one stress-free result – a resounding failure!

Often, people attribute other people's exams success to luck; but that's very wrong. People hardly pass exams by luck! Those who seem lucky prepared for their exams when nobody saw them.

While they labour in that secret part of the library, nobody sees them and so when they excel, it seems like luck. It's not! You see them when they come with you to watch football; but you don't see when they stay up late into the night studying and cross referencing materials to ensure they are well grounded. Their success is a product of their work; not luck!

Therefore, don't relax counting on luck; get down to work to do all that you should before the exam day to ensure you are adequately prepared.

It has been said that luck is preparation meeting opportunity and so if you really want to be lucky in your next exam; your secret is in preparing for your days of opportunity.

Prepare for your exams all the time. Prepare for the sudden test and exams early, even before there is serious need for that.

Chapter Four

Adequate Preparation is Key

The foundation for success in your exam is adequate preparation. It's the prepared that truly excel because they are the ones who understand their course enough to answer exams questions on their own without looking for the supposed help that comes in form of malpractice.

Unless you have the plan of using underhanded methods like cheating, sleeping with lecturers or paying for marks, bribing exam officials and departmental officials for marks, a sure path towards exam success is settling down to prepare for your exams.

Aside the fact that those underhanded methods don't guarantee excellent result, the truth is that they hunt you eventually in the future. They prevent you from taking the step that will enable you develop capacity. Instead of learning to acquire problem solving skills, you take the short cut and miss learning such crucial life lesson.

It's always better to get into your exam prepared than to get in hoping that you get placed side by side someone who will produce the answer while you copy. Is the person not a human being with one head?

Please don't even bring up the matter of IQ here. You don't need to have superior IQ to learn your course well enough to get at least credit level pass. You just need the ability to settle down and study.

People may disappoint you and your invigilator may reshuffle your *exam formation. Prepare for your exam such that even if they want you to write under flood light with four CCTV cameras mounted round you, you will still write from your head and excel. That's how I like to prepare for my exams.

Aside the fact that exam malpractice is a sin, the thought of resting my fortune squarely on another person scares me to death.

Therefore, for anything I want to get in life, what I do is determine what I have to do on my own, get to work on them and ask God to bless my efforts and do what I can't do for myself.

After that, I relax with roasted corn and ube or gurasa and chilled zobo. Then, whatever becomes the outcome is God's will.

As your exams draw close, forget lobbying for sitting arrangement, stop looking for a lecturer to sort or sleep with for marks, drop the plans of hiring a mercenary to write exam for you; none of these methods guarantees you an excellent performance in your exam.

Please don't follow your classmates who see those methods as the way forward; instead, devote yourself to studying your course so well that you can write any exam based on your course contents.

Start by ensuring you have a good understanding of the course contents for each of your courses and dig deep into thoroughly understanding each of the topics.

If there is anything you don't understand, just dig deeper, ask questions and ask your fellow students for help, surf the net and go for tutorials until you have very good grasp of your course contents.

If you find it difficult to understand your course, I recommend that you can equally get our programme, Lecture Decoding Hack and learn how to understand your course no matter how mad your lecturer's teaching ability or difficult your course materials. However, if you just find the course difficult, you may get, Cracking Difficult Courses programme.

Leave no note unread. Don't leave any topic for your sit mate to read; they may not be nearby on the day of exam.

Read as one who has only God's help plus what you have been able to study. This works all the time; irrespective of how many of your village people that are on your case!

Exam Formation: The concept of sitting together with intelligent classmates with the intent of sharing answers during exams.*

Chapter Five

Reading Your Course; Not Enough

Meanwhile, reading your courses is not enough; that's why you should go the extra mile in your quest for exam success.

The extra work you have to do can be likened to window dressing where you put finishing touches on your efforts and ensure you leave no stone unturned in your preparations.

So, ensure you cover your scheme of work thoroughly because if you are writing an external exam, you will be examined not based on what your teacher taught you in class but based on what the exam body has outlined to examine you on.

Also, beyond learning your course well, get acquainted with how your examiner wants you to answer his exams questions and the rules that guide the course or subject you are taking. Breaking some of such rules spells doom for your exam success despite your preparation.

You see, smart students often fail in exam, not for lack of the ability to excel; but ignorance of the rules of writing their exams or answering certain lecturer's questions. That's why you should put in your best to master them.

Study past questions. If you can get marking scheme and also study it, that would be good. If you are writing O'level exam, ask your subject teacher for marking scheme, they will have a way of getting for you if you disturb them long enough.

Chapter Six

Thorough Scheme Coverage

As your exams draw closer, I'd like you to work at ensuring proper coverage of your course outline. The essence of this is to ensure that you have read all that you should to be able to sit for your exam and tackle any question that may be thrown at you.

The first step in this direction is to ensure you have your course outline and the materials to study each of the topics. When you get hold of your course outline, gather materials based on the topics you have there, especially the ones you have been taught in class and begin to study.

To get enough materials, don't just concentrate on the ones your lecturer gave you, surf the net for materials and read from a variety of textbooks.

I have encountered people who don't see any reason to cover their course outline thoroughly because according to them, they don't need to answer all the questions in exam to pass or even get an A, especially in exams where you have the liberty of selecting some questions out of many to answer.

For them, they read just enough to pass exam; not to know their course.

Unfortunately, what they don't know is that while they have the freedom to choose from an array of exam questions in their exams, they don't have liberty to choose in real work environment.

When an employer or a client asks you to do work, they won't limit it to your area of concentration. He wouldn't even know what questions you answered in your exams so as to ask you in that line, but he'd assign a duty to you based on what you are expected to know as a chemist, lawyer or psychologist.

While they may have valid point about passing exam, I choose not to walk in their footsteps because my goal in any exam is not just to pass; I'm working at getting a resounding A.

Beyond the A in exam, I want to be so good in media, marketing and communication that I will work for the best companies, biggest political parties, most influential diplomat organizations and biggest religious organizations.

I literally want to be a deity of some sort in Marketing Communication in the class of marketing gods like Philip Kotler and Seth Godin.

Whether I achieve it or not is God's to decide; but I am sure reading just to pass exam is most certainly not the way towards achieving it.

People who want to be tops in their field, don't stop at the little their lecturer feed them with in class, they reach for stronger and deeper materials. So I can't be reading to pass when I really want to get at least 85% in all my exams and 95% in real life practice.

Moreover, reading only few topics gives me very limited option in exam such that once I can't answer questions on the few I read, I get stranded.

Chapter Seven

Embark on Effective Revision

When you have read your course thoroughly, it's a sign that you have a good grasp of your course content; but you may not guarantee clear recall of all that you may have studied. That's why you should make effort to engage in effective revision.

Revision involves revisiting what you have read to refresh your mind on them so as to make recall easy. It can be done at the point of study on a subject matter or close to exams.

You can revise at the point of study by revising whatever you may have read to determine if you have really understood what you read by asking yourself questions after reading and attempting to answer them or you wait till when exam is close so as to revise everything together when you start reading for exam.

Students generally claim to do revision; but many of them do it poorly and that's why as your exam draws closer, I want you to settle down and execute effective revision.

You achieve effective revision by ensuring you have all the materials you will need for your course, settling down to ensure that you have not only mastered them but can reproduce them.

What I do is that I get my course material, write out an outline on each of the topics and start discussing them with myself as if I am teaching someone to see if I can recollect everything I have read. Another option is that if there is any occasion of group discussion or tutorial where I have to teach people, I attempt teaching without looking into any paper. Once I spot any grey area, I spend more time studying it.

Moreover, it's at this point of your revision that you should spend more of your time reading your jotter; not studying big textbooks. You should have done that before the exam time table was released.

In your jotter or class note, start looking for striking questions your lecturer asked that look like exam questions. Start looking for those striking points he emphasized in a way that made you think it's a likely exam question. Ensure you study any such subject matter properly. Remember you can't leave your exam success to chance. It's too risky!

Whatever is peculiar to your course and your situation, just know that the litmus test of effective revision is your ability to keep abreast with what you have been taught and prepare a mental recall map that will help you reproduce what you have read in answering any question that may be asked.

For more on how to revise effectively, read my post, Keys to Effective Revision.

Chapter Eight

Take Exam-before-the-Exam

One way to measure your preparedness for your exam and effectiveness of your revision is by giving yourself what I call exam-before-the-exam.

This simply involves crafting questions for yourself based on every aspect of your course to examine your ability to recall what you have read.

The idea is that if you are able to answer all the questions you set for yourself, you would have gained mastery of all your course content.

It doesn't always mean you can answer any exam questions especially if your lecturer is a question twister. But one thing it sure guarantees is, if you understand your exam question and it's based on what you were taught in class, you are sure to be able to tackle the question.

Taking exam before the exam reveals how prepared you are for your exams and the areas where you are weak. It should be designed to test your learning so thoroughly that for you to really scale through, means you have gained mastery of your course content.

If you have to set the questions for yourself, make it as hard as possible. Your mock should be harder than the exam because it's not designed to make you have good feeling; but to determine how prepared you are for your exams.

Of course, I am not saying you should make it so hard that you will plant fear in your heart about the main exam; my emphasis is that it should be very thorough!

If you can find centers where such exams are done, please pay and participate. It will most certainly make you better and get you better prepared for your exams.

I know that people have written and passed their exams without such exams, but please understand that you may not be same with those people and they may have had their own look alike of such exams which better prepared them for their exams.

When you assess your performance, identify the areas you are weak and get to work on them so that in your main exam, you will excel in them.

Chapter Nine
Two-Better-than-One Principle

The wisest King, Solomon, wrote thousands of centuries ago that two are better than one because when one falls, another will lift him.

One application of that statement is that whatever you can achieve alone, you will do more if you enjoy the support of other persons that can be of use to you.

As your exams draw closer, I implore you to take advantage of this principle to make your preparation for exam easier and faster.

You do this by locating serious minded members of your class and arranging for a class discussion with them during which each of you will share your understanding of your courses and answer each other's questions in courses you find difficult.

Just sit down and hear them explain; it could make your reading time easier and less stressful. In fact, if you think you have a lot to cover, go to anyone that has covered and have them teach you the core of your courses; it helps you understand faster and saves you from entering exam hall empty.

I have always enjoyed discussion group because I take the lead in most of them I have been part of and the implication is that I reinforce what I have learnt by teaching while getting clarity from other classmates.

Meanwhile, I have seen people thank me for how I simplified our courses they thought was hard during such discussion.

Truth is that many of your lecturers may be good; but they may not be able to explain your courses in a way that you will understand it clearly.

Your classmates who are gifted teachers will make those seemingly difficult concepts so clear you will realize that there is no big deal in the course.

In fact, the best approach is locating serious minded classmates at the beginning of the semester and forging a mutually beneficial relationship with them that will make them spur you to learn more and even reach for higher grades.

I need to emphasize that it's not every relationship with your classmates that is beneficial; some of them are bundle of distraction and you should stay away from them. Please stay away from the unserious students, whose plans of succeeding are exam malpractice, meeting a lecturer for sex or paying for marks.

Any student whose plan for exam success is malpractice CANNOT possibly put in the seriousness required to learn his or her course well and they are most certainly not the kind of friends you want to have.

If they don't drag you into their lifestyle, they will at least distract you from the concentration and attention you should give to your proper preparation.

Therefore, while you are forging partnership, be super selective. I am not saying you should be in any form of enmity with them; my point is that you should know the limits of your friendship with them and ensure it doesn't become a distraction to you.

Chapter Ten Remove Distractions

Many times, students start the semester without any serious attention to their academic work and so preoccupy themselves with things like sports, religious activities, hobbies and social life.

These things are good because they make you a balanced person and get you better equipped for the world after school.

However, they are not the core of your mission in school. I understand that different students have different mission for being in school; but fundamental in all of them is academics. My opinion is that every other mission is secondary.

Therefore, now that your exams draw closer, you need to drop them completely or at least play them down – so down they won't in anyway interfere with your adequate preparation and mental alertness for your exams.

Instead of social life and hobby, give attention to personal study, discussion group, revision classes and tutorial centers that will help you get adequately prepared for your exams.

Distance yourself from people, associations, lifestyle and gadgets that take so much of your time, attention and energy that you are hardly able to prepare for your exam adequately.

They may not be bad things in themselves; but the truth is that if they take the lead in your priority, they become a distraction to your exam success.

If you are married, get your spouse to understand that you need to concentrate on your studies and so the other room activities may reduce and he or should help you with some chores so that you have more time to give attention to preparing for your exam.

In the same vein, if you are sponsoring yourself in school, your hustle can equally become a distraction. Your situation calls for getting the best of result possible and that is why I implore you to reduce your hustle activities so as to allow yourself ample time for preparation and revision.

Chapter Eleven

Don't Kill Yourself

As exams draw closer many students work and treat themselves as though they cannot break down or even die out of physical exhaustion.

They deny themselves sleep, eat junk and sometimes indulge in taking drugs to stay awake or be energetic.

They start stretching themselves beyond their limits and before long, it starts taking toll on their health and even psyche.

Stretching yourself beyond your limit is not bad; it's part of growth. However, what's bad is doing it so rapidly that your body starts suffering it as a result or you lose your mental alertness to retain what you have read or attend to your exam questions properly.

I understand that the intent for such changes is to ensure proper preparation for exam; but I need you to realize that there is life after exams and that's why you should take care of your body properly.

No matter how much you want to stretch yourself and deny yourself luxury to be able to cover your course, what I strongly recommend is that you take adequate rest that will relax your brain and ensure easy comprehension, good retention and recall of what you are studying.

Please stay away from drugs purported to be used for keeping awake and energized longer than your body could naturally carry. They have side effects which may only manifest long after your consumption of them.

Instead of drugs, I take enough food and sleep well and when I wake up with only four hours to read, I make the most of it by cutting off distractions that could come from my phone. It has become almost a rule for me, I don't go to read with someone that knows me. I need to give my study total attention.

When I am alert and have cut off distraction with only four hours left for revision, I will achieve far more than the person that has ten hours for study with an exhausted brain and multiple distractions.

So, now that your exam is around the corner; please don't kill yourself because it's just a means to an end; not an end in itself.

Your parents want to see you alive and not mad. There are works to do upon graduation and you have a future ahead of you.

Chapter Twelve

There is God o

Now, I want to take some time and talk to you about the place God in your exam.

Truth is that this matter is not in my outline; in fact, I was about sending the final copy to someone for review when I realized that the person will ask me about the place of God in boosting her exam success.

Aside the fact that she will be asking me about the place of God, my reason for including this chapter is because God is an integral part of our lives and most people who don't even give a damn about God remembers Him during exam because they want Him to come and perform miracle in their exams.

Now, we know God to be Almighty and All-powerful who can do anything we consider impossible and therefore call upon Him whenever we want the impossible done.

If you have a right standing with Him and ask Him rightly, He will answer you and intervene in your exam.

So, when you encounter difficult lecturers, courses and jam-packed exams, do well to call upon Him. He will answer you and make things easy for you.

His answer may be telling you to stop wasting your time on Instagram watching pictures that doesn't concern you or wasting your time watching football matches that doesn't add shishi in your pocket!

He can also answer by helping you understand that why you spend long time in library or night class without getting much is that you spent half of your time gisting with your friend or bae and the other half trying to read and sleep.

I need you to understand that He is not in support of your laziness. So, if you are one of those that won't read; but while away your time or misplace your priority by unguided attention to religious activities and expect to pass with A, you need to wake up.

You see, I haven't met God nor discussed this matter with Him; but based on His character I could see from the Scriptures, I am sure He doesn't want to reward people for doing nothing.

He doesn't want to give you an A when you haven't done anything. He usually supports those that have done their best. Even the biblical David had to sling while God supported His slinging to make sure Goliath was killed.

No matter how much you know God, serve Him or pray to Him, do your best to study well and hard! When you have done that, pray to Him for help and He will come through for you.

One of the most annoying prayers I have heard people pray concerning their exam is that God should make their lecturers sleep while marking their script so that they will give them A.

Tufiakwa!

First, when the lecturer sleeps while marking your paper, he may give you an F instead of A. Take note! By the way, would you like to have someone pray that you get drunk or sleep while you mark script as a lecturer?

Bros, God is not with you in this kind of selfish and wicked prayers.

My thinking is that God would prefer that the lecturer be awake to mark so that when He gets to your paper, he will recognize that of all the students that have taken that course in his last 30 years as a lecturer in three universities, no one has demonstrated your kind of excellent delivery in an exam.

God is a miracle worker and He still performs academic miracles in the lives of His children; however, He doesn't want to perform the miracle that will make you graduate empty headed with miracle As!

Instead of making you pass your course miraculously without learning and become a Killer Doctor, he would rather that you pass so well that even your lecturers will respect you.

Therefore, instead of praying that He reveals area of concentration for you, ask Him to make you understand your course content so well that aside teaching your fellow classmates, your lecturers will use your intelligent and in-depth answers in exam in updating their notes for next session.

My favorite Bible characters and role model in learning and schooling are Daniel and friends.

Dan 1:17 God gave these four men knowledge, wisdom, and the ability to understand all kinds of literature. Daniel could also understand all kinds of visions and dreams. ¹⁸ At the end of the three-year training period, ... ¹⁹ The king talked to them and found no one like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah among all of them. ²⁰ Whenever the king asked them about things that required wisdom and insight, he found that they knew ten times more than all the magicians and psychics in his whole kingdom. (God's Word Translation)

You know what God really wants to do in your life?

Give you the aptitude to understand all kinds of statistics, medicine, communication or whichever course you are studying; (not give you area of concentration) so that when at the end of your years of study, when a potential employer examines you, you will prove to be exceptional and when you are given a task, you will deliver 10X result!

That should be the focus on your prayer!

Chapter Thirteen

My Point?

Exam success is never by accident or luck and it comes only to those who are adequately prepared before the exam.

Your past failure in your exam doesn't make you a perpetual failure; that's just your past.

You may have failed in the past because of what you don't know because you don't have the capacity to really pass your exam and excel in it.

So, if you desire to do better in your next exam, make sure you understand what you are required to do in your exam, embark on adequate preparation, work towards excellent delivery in your exam and God will help you.

Go and may God help you excel in your exam!

Premium Resources

We have a collection of resources to help you deal with your academic challenges, boost your performance in school and prepare for life after school. They are carefully and thoroughly prepared to provide you lasting and profitable value.

You can overlook them and wallow in the pains you currently suffer and sink deeper into poor performance in school or grab them and enjoy the benefit of learning what really works in your pursuit of academic excellence and avoiding the mistakes those ahead of you learnt the hard way.

They are crafted with the primary goal of boosting your performance in school and positioning you for career exploits upon graduation.

1. Quick Recall System: Many students go for lecture, read their materials and even attend tutorials; but fail to recall in their exam. The problem is that they either cheat, get caught and risk rustication or failure in their exam.

Now, I know what it means to get into an exam and forget what you have read or you have been taught without any means of getting your answer while in the exam and I would want the last time you experienced something like that to be the very last.

That will be possible if you learn my quick recall secret which I have poured in this course, Quick Recall System. In it, you will learn why you forget what you read during exam, how to ensure you remember ANYTHING you read inside exam hall and even months and years afterwards.

2. Lecture Decoding Hack: If you sit down for your lectures or read your course materials; but don't seem to grasp anything from the lecturer, it could be that the lecturer is a bad teacher or you are just unable to decode the subject.

Whichever may be your situation, Lecture Decoding Hack is designed to teach you how to understand your lecturers in class and decode your lecture materials so well you not just excel in your exam; but teach your classmates.

Consuming this programme equips you to understand your lectures fast and save you the pain of poor performance in case of sudden tests or jam-packed exam timetable.

3. Overcoming Excessive Sleep: In school, you often have lots of materials to study to be fully prepared for your exam. But you can't do it when you spend all your time sleeping.

I understand that you may not sleep out of your volition; but seem overpowered by sleep each time you want to read. If that's your case, you are not alone and it may not be your village people or any demon.

There are many people like you. I used to be like you. I tried using some stimulant and drugs to stay awake; but when I found that they can damage vital organs in my body, I stopped taking any stimulant.

From my practice and trial, I developed a system that helps me keep awake and study whenever I want to study; even at night and that's what you are getting when take hold of, Controlling Excessive Sleep.

4. Cracking Difficult Courses: If you find certain course/subject difficult; it's a pity! I feel for you because you have to still take the course or write exam on the subject to get required CGP or credit.

I have been in that situation and I failed my course again and again until the need to move forward with my academic pushed me to seek why I find the course difficult while others don't and why some courses I find simple are hard to others. I put to practice a formula I developed and passed the seemingly difficult course.

The good thing is that the lessons have helped me in tackling any difficult course I encounter so well that I even teach fellow students such courses. When you get hold of Cracking Difficult Courses, you will learn why you find any course difficult, how to simplify it and gain mastery of it.

5. Exam Delivery Mastery: Many smart and prepared students get into their exam hall and fumble not because of poor preparation or Village-People Effect; but because of failure to deliver their answers effectively. That's why you sometime come out of your exam complaining about what you should have written; but couldn't.

In Exam Delivery Mastery, you will learn the right mindset and attitude that will guarantee you excellent delivery of your answers in your exams and how to acquire them. You will equally learn how to write to the satisfaction of your examiner and stay clean of troubles inside your exam hall.

6. Campus Survival on Lean Pocket: I know what it means to go to school with little financial support or while taking care of myself. Since I know I can't steal and to go and beg money dey hard me, I devised survival strategies that helped me and that's what I poured into this programme, Campus Survival on Lean Pocket.

I designed the programme to show you how to survive as a student on low budget and it will be especially helpful if you are sponsoring yourself in school, have little support or trying to save money for big investment.

Each of these premium programmes is made up of a book and audio on each chapter of the book + access into my Peak Student Inner Circle—where I share exclusive insight that will boost your performance in school and position you for life after school.

Once you enter the inner circle, you can ask any question for clarification on anything that bothers you as well as get guidance in applying what you have learnt from any of the above programmes.

Although the key content is the same in the book and audio, you may find more examples, digressions and illustrations in the audio that will prove really useful and the audio helps you learn while you do laundry, walk to class or wait on queues.

Bonus Offer >>> If you order for any two of these programmes, you get Exam Delivery Mastery + Campus Survival on Lean Pocket as a bonus. It's our way of supporting you for having enough sense to invest in yourself.
